

Interactive comment on “Early Portuguese meteorological records (18th century)” by M. J. Alcoforado et al.

C. Mock

mockcj@sc.edu

Received and published: 24 November 2011

Nice paper describing some unique Portuguese sources, including those in Brazil. On the historical temperature data, you might consider looking at the diurnal ranges and directly compare with similar diurnal ranges from modern hourly temperature data. That can help assess a lot on prospects of data quality.

Interactive comment on Clim. Past Discuss., 7, 3399, 2011.